

Jennifer Flaherty is an Associate Professor of Shakespeare studies in the English Department, where she serves as coordinator of the Literature program. She began working at Georgia College in 2012, and she directed the MA program in English for six years. She has been named the Eta Sigma Alpha Distinguished Professor twice in her time at Georgia College. She received her PhD in Comparative Literature from UNC Chapel Hill. Her research focuses on adaptation studies, particularly the question of how Shakespeare has been used to address contemporary girlhood. Her writing has been published in peer-reviewed journals such as Borrowers and Lenders and Interdisciplinary Literary Studies, as well as volumes such as Shakespeare and Millennial Fiction and the Routledge Handbook to Shakespeare and Global Appropriation. She recently collaborated with Heather C. Easterling to edit the book The Taming of the Shrew: The State of Play for Bloomsbury Arden, forthcoming in 2021.
