

Dr. Amy Sumpter began teaching at Georgia College in 2008 after completing her master's program in Geography at the University of Colorado and doctoral program in Geography at Louisiana State University. She is the program coordinator for the B.A. in Geography and the Minor in Urban Studies. Her research and teaching interests include geographies of race and ethnicity, cultural geography, urban geography, historical geography, and the use of high-impact practices/engaged learning in geography courses. In 2016-1017, she was accepted into the Governor's Teaching Fellow program, and from 2018 to 2020 she served on campus as one of five Chancellor's Learning Scholars. She serves as a faculty advisor to the Geography Club.
